

Making documents, websites, and dashboards with R

Why do you want to make websites and dashboards?

Plan for today

Markdown and universal writing

(45 minutes)

Merging code and text with R Markdown

(60 minutes)

R Markdown and websites

(45 minutes)

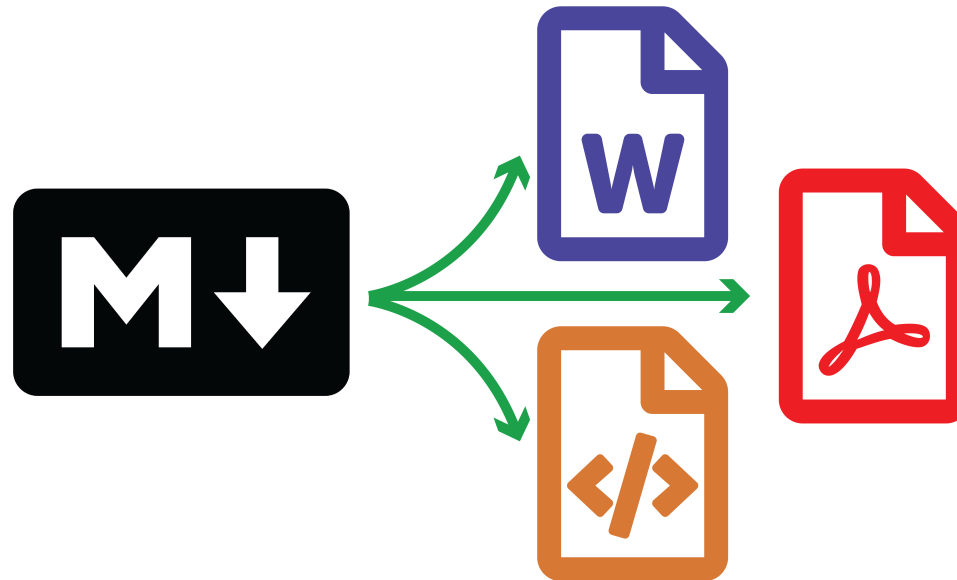

Dashboards with R

(30 minutes)

(R) Markdown

Use one simple syntax to create documents, websites, and dashboards

It's magical!

June 15, 2018. Forthcoming in the Routledge Handbook of NGOs and International Relations

NGOs and Authoritarianism

Andrew Heiss
Brigham Young University
andrew_heiss@byu.edu

In January 2017, China's new 2017 Overseas NGO Law came into effect, restricting the rapidly growing community of international NGOs (INGOs) by requiring that all foreign NGOs be monitored and overseen by a Professional Supervisory Unit—typically a government ministry or government-run NGO. The law also imposes strict requirements on the issue areas foreign NGOs can address, limiting them to education, technology, sports, poverty alleviation, and other non-contentious issues. In debates over the law, the Chinese Communist Party identified INGOs as direct threats to national security and designed the law to limit Western influence and insulate China's domestic NGO sector from foreign values, allowing the government to "better protect China from perceived external threats to its sovereignty and social stability" (Shieh 2017).

NGOs and Authoritarianism

Andrew Heiss
Brigham Young University
andrew_heiss@byu.edu

June 15, 2018

In January 2017, China's new 2017 Overseas NGO Law came into effect, restricting the rapidly growing community of international NGOs (INGOs) by requiring that all foreign NGOs be monitored and overseen by a Professional Supervisory Unit—typically a government ministry or government-run NGO. The law also imposes strict requirements on the issue areas foreign NGOs can address, limiting them to education, technology, sports, poverty alleviation, and other non-contentious issues. In debates over the law, the Chinese Communist Party identified INGOs

June 15, 2018

NGOs and Authoritarianism

Andrew Heiss

Brigham Young University

In January 2017, China's new 2017 Overseas NGO Law came into effect, restricting the rapidly growing community of international NGOs (INGOs) by requiring that all foreign NGOs be monitored and overseen by a Professional Supervisory Unit—typically a government ministry or government-run NGO. The law also imposes strict requirements on the issue areas foreign NGOs can address, limiting them to education, technology, sports, poverty alleviation, and other non-contentious issues. In debates over the law, the Chinese Communist Party identified INGOs as direct threats to national security and designed the law to limit Western influence and insulate China's domestic NGO sector from foreign values, allowing the government to "better protect China from perceived external threats to its sovereignty and social stability" (Shieh 2017).

← → ↻ 🔒 https://stats.andrewheiss.com/who-cares-about-crackdowns/03_analysis.html

WHO CARES ABOUT CRACKDOWNS? Experiment Data Tables Figures Manuscript

General demographics of recipients

- Religion
- General trends in private philanthropy
 - Total giving
 - Average per capita giving
- Simulations
 - Income across issue area, funding, and relationship
 - Education across issue area, funding, and relationship
 - Religiosity across issue area, funding, and relationship
 - Education and religion across issue area, funding, and relationship
 - Social trust across issue area
 - Social trust across relationship
 - Social trust across funding

Analysis and figures

Suparna Chaudhry, Marc Dotson, and Andrew Heiss
Last run: 2021-04-21

General demographics of recipients

Religion

| Religion | Percentage |
|--------------------|------------|
| Other | ~22% |
| Catholic | ~18% |
| Protestant | ~15% |
| Christian Orthodox | ~12% |
| Atheist | ~8% |

WHO CARES ABOUT CRACKDOWNS?

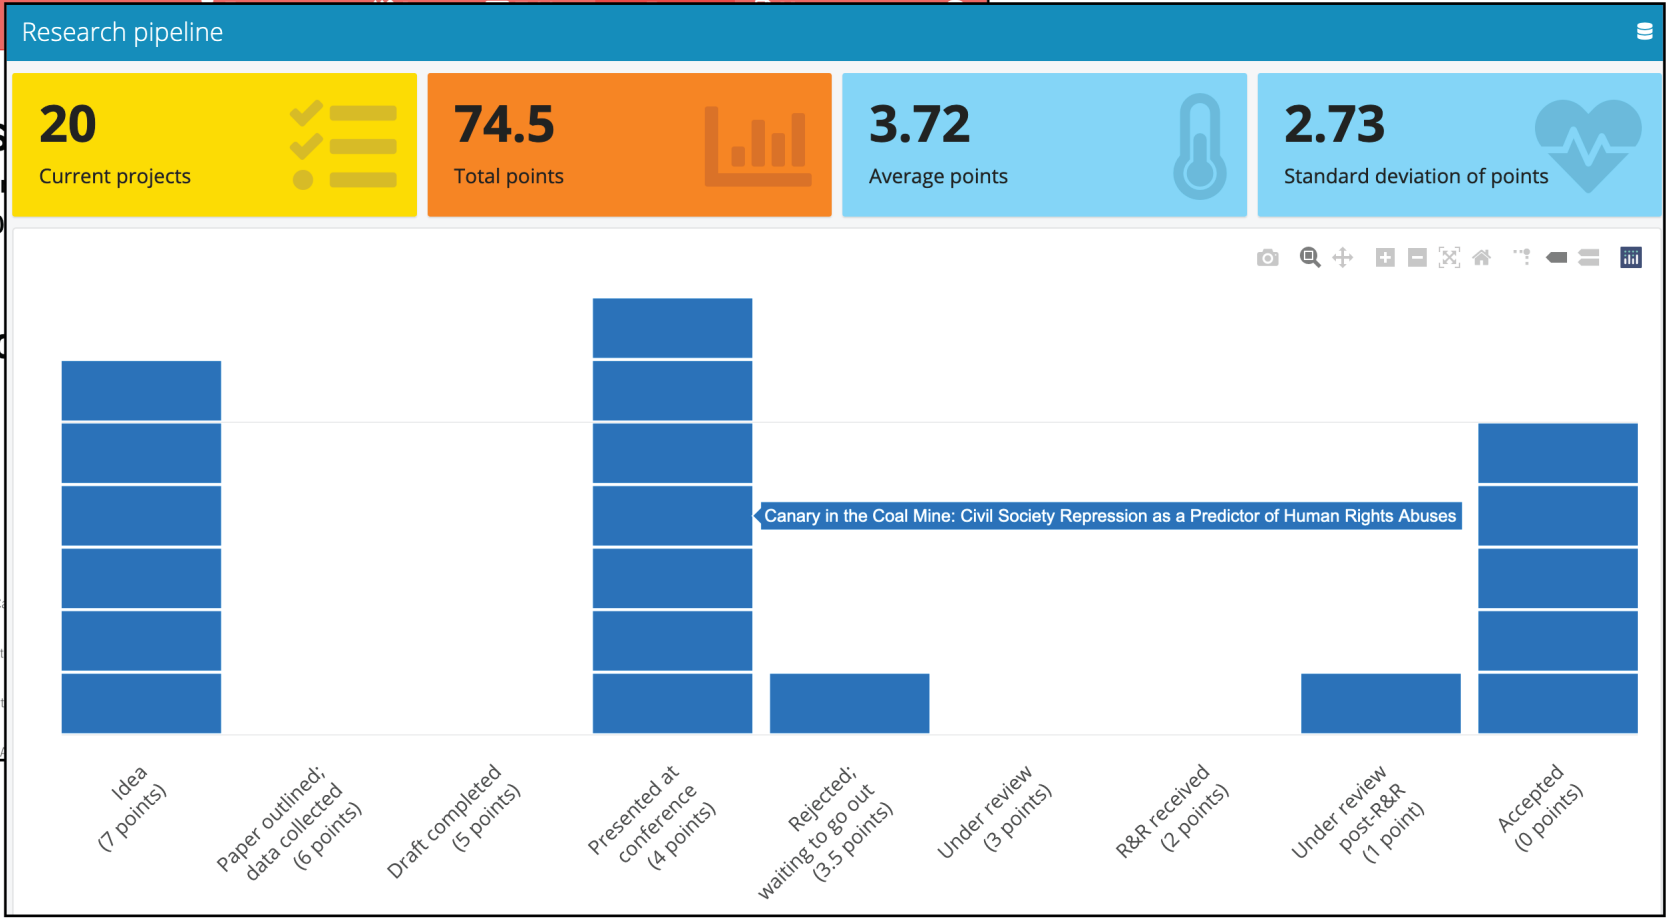

General demographics of recipients

- Religion
- General trends in private philanthropy
- Total giving
- Average per capita giving
- Simulations
 - Income across issue area, funding, and relationship
 - Education across issue area, funding, and relationship
 - Religiosity across issue area, funding, and relationship
 - Education and religion across issue area, funding, and relationship
- Social trust across issue area
- Social trust across relationship
- Social trust across funding

Analysis

Suparna Chaudhary
Last run: 2021-0

General d Religion

Resources

All workshop materials and a ton of additional resources are available here:

<https://andhs.co/gpl-interactive>